Mouth Music were the first band to see Gaelic/Celtic music as having international relevance; their first album in 1991 (The Scrape) provided a blueprint for just about every ambient/world/Celtic act to follow.. and there have been many This is the Martins (Swan & Fury) 3rd album and follows in the footsteps of the previous releases blending a superb mix of tradition Scottish folk, roots & Celtic influences

What is Mouth Music?

Mouth music is found in nearly every culture, in one form or another. The basic idea is to sing a tune by choosing words and rhythmic sounds that best shape the sound of the music, rather than putting the main emphasis on the story. This idea takes many forms, from American jazz scat singing to West African call-and-response, cultures around the world have traditions of rhythmic words and syllables that drive, emphasize and ornament a tune sung by mouth.

Celtic mouth music itself takes many forms. Bagpipe imitations, work songs, nonsense songs, dance tunes that are sung-- the Celtic tradition of mouth music is rich and varied. It is also a pure folk music form-- taken for granted as a simple part of everyday life.
